State the President has entered that the public printing shall confor to the standard adopted by the spel-Hing reformers, general attention has been drawn to it and it has been found that the changes, which affect about 200 words are not so radical as at first supposed.

The New York Tribune says: "The work is very largely a vindication of Noah Webster and few who consult his dictionary and acknowledge it as standard will find much to shock them in this instalment of reform. One hundred and thirty-one words are spelled as the reformers would have us spell them, and in five other cases, the proposed spelling is used as an alternative." Then follows a here, but which includes those like, labor, neighbor, etc., about thirty-five
